To whom it may concern

I met Ross Mitchell from Madison Chemicals a few years ago and was inspired by his passion for a new product he had developed. Ross went to great lengths to show me how the chemical reaction worked for the epoxy based siding finished and after using most other pre-finished siding products available on the market, we decided this product would be a great selling feature for our customers that demand as maintenance free exterior as possible.

To date, we have completed several projects where GemThane Siding was utilized. One of which is being featured in the upcoming August/September issue of the Forum Magazine. This was a large project and required a great deal of exterior running trim and siding and co-operation from GemThane. Overall, the project went smoothly and looks fabulous.

Although, GemThane Siding Systems started out with the usual hiccups, as any new product would, they have worked hard to improve on their system over the last few years. Today, I feel that Gemthane Siding Systems offers a superior and unique product that truly captures the warmth of wood, without the hassle.

I am completely comfortable recommending and using GemThane siding in the future and look forward to continuing my relationship with the folks at GemThane for years to come, including the odd inspirational visit from Ross.

Great job Gemthane!
